

An SIS Epidemic in Large Population with Individual Variation

Philip Pollett

Ross McVinish<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup>The University of Queensland

We consider a model similar to the stochastic SIS (Susceptible-Infectious-Susceptible) model in continuous time, which accounts for variation amongst individuals. We prove that, as the population size grows, the process can be approximated by a deterministic process. The equilibrium points of the limiting process are identified and their stability is examined.